THE ISLAND

Who shall stay back on this island
long after we have left?

The hills shall stay on until they collide with a heavenly star, larger thoughts.

The talks of our own childhoods, the transient phrases, their lack of conjunctions.

Those many who could not leave, because they were never meant to, so early, before their full growth.

And a few who were lonely like us, looked frail because of their deep griefs, always with us, deep in the sea cavities of our minds, floating in the salt water, like tears.

Who will remember us, feel sad about our going, consoling each other, trying desperately to forget us?
